Mira Solano
Founder and lead photographer

Where the name comes from

In 2018, Mira Solano left a sheet of cyanotype paper on a windowsill. When she rinsed it, the sun had turned the paper deep blue everywhere except where a leaf, a key, and her hand had blocked the light.

A sunprint is the earliest kind of photograph, made from nothing but paper, light, and water. Mira has spent the years since chasing that feeling with cameras. Today Sunprint is three photographers who share one rule: work with the light that's already there.

Daylight only

No flash and no studio strobes. We plan around the sun and adjust when the weather has other ideas.

Slow sessions

Sessions run at the pace of the people in them. We build in extra time so nobody is hurried.

Prints first

Screens are for previews. Every package includes prints, because a photograph is better when you can hold it.
